Saturday, February 13, 1982

arch

irvey

Clise home

ey ordered a survey of re making a final decision. firms listed drawbacks to 't a major urban center major airport in Pullman. technical labor pool, an ong local tax base and a vice president of business ot for a major airport and dems could be worked out. of and the City of Pullman pping a joint research park were told that if the latest imposed — $4.5 million in llion ordered last year — a taff positions would have to e debate increase

ignore" several issues incially healthy utility" and ie based on plans to spend ion, when "there is almost ts planned projects will be groups want to argue in eir contention that Puget ation of its operating exship to Puget's actual or vstem" and that the utility tht less-expensive financing the Pacific Northwest at Marymoor designated a landmark by Herb Belanger

The Seattle Times A 11

Times suburban reporter

The James W. Clise residence at Marymoor Park near Redmond is the first property to be designated a landmark by the King County Landmarks Commission. The designation made Thursday and means that any proposed alterations to the building must be reviewed by the commission.

The Clise residence, which now houses a museum, was built by a Seattle banker and president of the first trust company in the state as a hunting lodge in 1907. Three years later, the Clise family moved there permanently and operated it as Willowmoor Farm, famous for its award-winning herd of Avrshire cattle and Morgan horses. In other commission action, a motion to designate the 72-year-old Morasch House in the Highline area failed. But the house subsequently was given communitylandmark status, which does not provide the same protection as does the county-landmark designa-

Stephen T. Araki, the attorney for Marion Kurosu and her son, Rov. who own Morasch property. had indicated the owners would appeal to the County Council over actions taken by the commission. The Aaron Neely Mansion, built in 1894 in Auburn, also is being man for Puget Power, said mission and that the utility considered for county-landmark designation.